

I live in a very rural state where it is very difficult to get radio signals on a consistent basis. XM radio has made a big difference in my travels, because I can now listen to the things I want to, when I want to. Any attempt by the federal government to restrain XM from reaching its full potential would violate not only free speech laws, but also the established free market principles that support all of our business endeavors. The NAB needs to control their own destiny by finding ways to better compete against XM, not seek relief from fair and open competition via government obstruction.

Since this nation was founded, businesses all across the United States have flourished because of innovation. Radio Stations need to find ways to regain or maintain their audiences from XM, not in spite of it.

Tony Bessey
XM Listener